

Human Dental Pulp Stem Cells (hDPSCs)

Once a cavity has gone past the dentin layer of the tooth, it is thought to be irreversible. However, if the stem cells present in the pulp were differentiated and proliferated, they would be able to regenerate the lost pulp tissue.