DIRECTOR’S NOTE

When tasked with deciding what show I wanted to do this C Term, I knew I wanted a show about something I could relate to. I wanted something that would challenge tech to create something elaborate and beautiful, but I also wanted something that was wild, funny, and raw. However, I knew that I couldn’t do a show alone, and I knew there was only one person who could do it with me - Caroline Warchol. Together we searched the internet for plays that excited us and could be challenging on a technical level. We found 10 Out of 12 by Anne Washburn, and suddenly we were hooked. No other play we found could match the love we had for this show. It was settled, we would do a show about the one time a term we all dread: Q2Q.

For those of you that are not familiar with the concept of Q2Q, it is the first time we see all the technical elements of the show come together and jump around from cue to cue in order to get the timing of transitions down and get a first chance to practice the show as a whole before proceeding with performance week. It is a hectic but rewarding experience, and you’re about to witness it all.

10 Out of 12 takes you through the 3 day Q2Q for a show about, well... honestly, we’re still trying to figure that out. But you see it all: wrong costumes, confusing lights, loud sounds, backstage shenanigans, and an actor who thinks he knows best. This show sits close to my heart, and I could not have done it without everyone who put their heart and soul into making it come to life; especially Caroline who brought this amazing cast of characters to life. (Thank you Callie, without you this show would never had made it off the ground).

Thank you to everyone who has ever worked on a theatrical performance. Everyone who helps put on a show, no matter the size of your role, leaves a personal touch on that performance that makes it unique from every other one. And that is what makes a show beautiful.

Thank you,
Rachel Rynazewski
